Description

Inside your computer is an entire world filled completely with people who are individual parts in a massive computational system otherwise known as your home personal computer. Every citizen or “file” inside this system knows what they do and why they do it.

What if this amazing, perfect utopian world, otherwise known by its own populace as “C City,” “The city” or “The System” was dying? What if this city were to fall victim to the same entropic forces responsible for the inevitable heat-death of the universe? That’s just not something you can fight.

Or is it?

No it isn’t, but you can sure as hell try!

Enter Dacosta, a lazy, complaining wannabe detective who is the one program in the system that is both the first and last line of defense against what is simultaneously impossible, and inevitable.

One day, Dacosta discovers the immensely destructive Maelstrom virus who has lost his memory and identity. Ever the determined fool, Dacosta takes Maelstrom under his wing, gives him the new identity of “Nasser”, and attempts to teach the virus right from wrong. Everything goes well until it all goes horribly, terribly wrong. Maelstrom and Dacosta, student and teacher turn on each other as both their lives are torn completely asunder.

Meanwhile, the world is dying around them!

C City’s story is as brutal as it is Shakespearian, complex, and intricate.
