Premise

Imagine if you will, a fictional character who was born with the foreknowledge that they would have a great destiny. She didn't know the nature or scope of the destiny, or even when it would happen. What she did know however, was that she absolutely wanted no part of it.

Andrea Hamilton lives her life constantly being propositioned to save a civilization or become a figurehead in some far-off war, take part in a freaky science experiment, or get involved in a contrived love triangle. It's always the sort of thing that would kick off any other TV show. The thing is, Andrea knows better. Her plot awareness allows her to realize when a sequence of events could lead to serialized adventures, and her wits allow her to outsmart the power of the plot itself.

She along with her friends, the engineering prodigy Brianne and her antithesis Dmitri will outwit, outsmart, and overpower the universe itself and completely, absolutely ruin someone else's day. Why? Andrea really doesn't appreciate people forcing their crap on her, that's why.

Truth

Some Episodes

OMG Lightning Quick was so hot tho

"Sweet, Sweet Justice"
Parody of Justice League.

What do you do when you fall in love with a hero? When you're Andrea Hamilton and have the power of plot, you join him and his super hero squad, fighting against giant monsters and world-conquering despots. Except, he's uninterested and she's oblivious. Yay?

'strue. Giant robots ARE pretty sweet.

"Giant Robots are pretty sweet though"
Parody of Mobile Suit Gundam

Andrea is stoked to have an experimental giant warsuit prototype fall into her lap. Less so about its pilot and some new... expectations.
